

NEW YORKISMS.

From our own Correspondent.

New York, Aug. 8. By the time this letter is received and published, the mortal remains of General Charles G. Halpine will have been confined to the earth. The funeral takes place this morning from his residence, No. 58 West Forty-second street. Everything that public and private tribute can do to show honor to his memory has been done. These tributes he deserved. All the world knows what he was publicly; but all the world does not know what he was in the more screened and exclusive circles of society, or among the invulnerable sanctities of home. He was as fond of children as a child itself was, and one of the prettiest sights was to see this strong, powerfully-built man bending alike his body and his mind to satisfy the sweet tyrannies which he encouraged children to exercise over him. None of his political or newspaper duties ever caused him to forget those of home. He was never moody at his own hearthstone because he was brilliant in society; he never seemed to allow the thought to enter his mind that because he was master under his own roof-tree, he had a right to bring there a temper less generous and sweet than that he took out with him into the world. For a long time past he had been subject to severe headaches and congestive attacks. The extreme susceptibility of his nervous system precluded his remedying them by the natural healing which sleep would have yielded to a less fully strung body and brain, and the amount of ether and chloroform he got into the habit of inhaling was not without its dismal reactionary effect. Amid all his brilliancy, he was unfortunately situated for one whose shining talents furnished so great a reason for the preservation of health. Yet had he chosen to prolong his life, and nurse himself by those small and patent precautions which people of his temperament find it so difficult to observe, it must have been in a less prominent sphere than the one he occupied, and we may be sure that to such a man a different mode of life would have been worse than death. Like many another man in his station, he was goaded on by the dismal omniscience of circumstances, through the feverish applause of the world and the fitful gloom of occasional self-dependency, in doing all that was expected of him up to the last moment of his life. When once the use of any anesthetic is commenced, we all know how immediately the repetition settles into an unconquerable habit. The bromide of potassium and the bromide of ammonia, which his physician prescribed, might safely have been taken without any of that reaction which so weakens the will and judgment, and demoralizes the whole nervous system; but the sufferer probably found them too slow in their action, and so substituted ether and chloroform, those matchless quieters of disordered nerves. Meanwhile distinguished men of almost every class have united to do him honor. The Irish Legion, the Fire Commissioners, and the Knights of St. Patrick have passed befitting resolutions, and the presence of a large number of cavalry and infantry will give a military character to the funeral. The undrawn portion of his income, which probably amounted to $50,000, will most likely revert to his widow, if such a proposition can be made to prevail with Governor Fenton. I have already mentioned the Spicer poisoning case more than once, and the reason I return to it again is because of the very peculiar interest thousands of readers here feel in it, on account of the strange rendering of the verdict. The Coroner's inquest was finally concluded on Wednesday, nearly three weeks after the poisoning had taken place. It is a mission with some city editors of newspapers to proceed on the assumption that no reader ever recollects anything that was in the newspaper the day before. Permit me, for the moment, to borrow this idea, and remind the reader of the facts in the Spicer case, to the end that he may exercise his ingenuity in unravelling a mystery that seems to be unravellable. On Sunday afternoon, July 19, Mr. John Spicer, a middle-aged man, sent his colored servant named Adkins to a Sixth avenue drug store for a Seidlitz powder. According to the testimony, the powder was handed to Adkins in a sealed envelope, and passed from him to Mr. Spicer, wife of the dead man, in the unbroken and sealed condition. Mrs. Spicer says that she laid it in this condition upon the bureau in her husband's room, and that he opened and took it himself alone. Within a few moments after swallowing it he exhibited symptoms of having been poisoned by strychnine, and within fifteen minutes he was seized with frightful convulsions, that so curved his spine inward as to leave the depth of a foot between the inmost point of the curvature and the bed whereon he lay, and in another instant left him a purple-faced corpse. Four persons now appear for suspicion to fasten upon. These are the drug store clerk who prepared the powder, the servant who bought it, the wife who received it, and the man who swallowed it. In the case of the drug store clerk the suspicion must be one of simply an egregious and unpardonable blunder; if Adkins or Mrs. Spicer be suspected, the ugly word murder inevitably lites its voice, and if the dead man himself be cited in question the affair is, of course, one of suicide. Yet at each of these points suspicion is opposed, if not totally dispelled. The fatal powder was taken from a drawer containing scores of other powders prepared at the same time and place, sold to many different people without any ill results, and pronounced by competent medical examiners to be genuine Seidlitz powder. Then in regard to Adkins, the colored servant, nothing in the whole course of the testimony occurred which could land the shadow of a just suspicion upon him. Even Mrs. Spicer, who, if she were guilty would scarcely have missed this ingenious means of transferring her guilt, attaches no blame to Adkins, and declares that it is impossible the poison should have been inserted during the brief interval remained in the servant's hands. And next, no motive, small or great, has yet bubbled up, which Mrs. Spicer could have had for thus compassing her husband's death. Re-Adkins and friends testified that Mr. and Mrs. Spicer did not live unhappily together, and no hint is even suggested as to Mrs. Spicer's fidelity as a wife. To be sure, she and her husband had recently had a slight altercation, but from all that appeared at the inquest, the dispute was like the frequent interchange of cross words between an impatient sick man, and a quiet-tempered woman who does not give him all the attention he thinks he needs. But then, finally, two important facts step in. The first is that Mr. Spicer, before the dose was swallowed, was not known to cherish any suicidal idea, and after the dose was swallowed manifested the most frantic desire to live; and the second is that Mrs. Spicer was the first one to suggest the idea of her husband's having been poisoned, and during the progress of the inquest made the following extraordinary avowal: "I said to myself, not thinking that my destruction and his death depended upon it,

"Well, they can't make much out of that at five cents," referring to the price of the powder. Yet if Mrs. Spicer be guilty of murder, the name of the person from whom, or the place from which the strychnine was procured, would surely have loomed up, however indistinctly, during the evidence. Who it was therefore that mingled the poison with the powder remains as profound a mystery as ever. The verdict entirely exonerates the clerk and anybody connected with the drug store; it likewise exonerates Mr. Spicer from the charge of suicide; but with regard to whatever suspicions the jury-men may entertain, it observes a silence as impenetrable as the mystery itself. To turn from these gloomy themes I rejoice to say that the occupants of tenement-houses in this city have at length resolved to knock down no longer to the tyrannies and sins of omission of their landlords. The anxiety and discomfort of these tenement-houses are proverbial, and the tenants have lately formed themselves into a protective association known as the "Tenants' Union." The object may be readily surmised. It is to compel landlords to respect the laws which were passed at the last session of the Legislature of the State, for the security and comfort of tenants. A number of building inspectors, one for each district, are going to be employed by the "Union," and are expected to report whatever repairs are required to its Executive Committee, and the Committee will immediately instruct its legal adviser to take proper measures for the establishment of its rights. This is something like, isn't it? What do the Quakers say to the presence of so many legs in your city? I allude to the Black Crook at the Walnut and Wise Rows at the Chesnut. News of the moral anomalies you are enduring at these two establishments has reached New York; but moral enormities are never so forgivable as when they come in the shape of gauze-saucer skirts and pink silk gowns. Believe that the best days of the ball are over in this city, and that the public is gradually toppling over into a tendency towards the legitimate. Wallack's, the only temple that furnishes that independent of Edwin Booth's, is to reopen for the regular season on September 14, and until then we shall have the old drama of Miss Lotta, and the sickening bedazzlements of Humpty Dumpty. CHARLES STOKES & CO.

WHEN A POPULAR INVENTION of any kind, by its own intrinsic merits, goes beyond all rivals in fame and real value, it can afford to be magnanimous. This is precisely the position of the Grover & Baker Sewing Machine, the agency of which in this city is located at No. 730 Chestnut street. The manufacture and sale of these invaluable instruments exceeded those of any other sewing machine in the world. The annual sale of these machines is astonishingly large. These machines are not only admirably adapted to be the best Family Sewing Machines extant, for a number of reasons, either one of which would be sufficient to give it the popular preference it enjoys.

MESSES. E. G. WHITMAN & Co's Summer Confections are an indispensable luxury to parties going out of town. They are made from the purest materials, put up in neat boxes, convenient for carrying, and are just the thing for making parties. If he does not want when away from home, let every man who loves his family show it by often visiting No. 318 Chestnut street, and procuring a supply of these delicious preparations.

NO SURETY guarantee of the superiority of the Wheeler & Wilson Gold Medal Sewing Machine can be required than is shown by the number of machines manufactured and sold by the several sewing machine companies up to the time of the expiration of the Howe patent, September 10, 1867. The Wheeler & Wilson, 200,000, an excess of 100,000 over all other machines.

JEWELRY.—Mr. William W. Cassidy, No. 12 South Second street, has the largest and most attractive assortment of fine jewelry and silverware in the city. Purchasers can rely upon obtaining a real, pure article furnished at a price which cannot be equalled. He also has a large stock of American watches in all varieties and at all prices. Certificate from a Cured Rheumatic. To Dr. Fitler, No. 29 S. Fourth street.—Dear Sir—My antipathy to advertising a blessing to humanity is now overcome. Your great medicine will immediately cure you. When I look back thirty years ago, I see thousands suffering with that painful disease, Rheumatism or Neuralgia, with little relief, and no cure from the many articles with which they were deluged. I desire you to announce to the public that I, your patient, have been cured by your Rheumatic Remedy, and certainly be cured by your wonderful and harmless medicine. E. A. DAHERTY, No. 209 N. Ninth street, Camden, N. J.

I Was Cured of Rheumatism by Dr. Fitler's Rheumatic Remedy after spending large sums in the different treatments unsuccessfully, and could say to all suffering with Rheumatism, that the conditions that will cure you in a certain number of bottles or return the money. You are then safe and free from all suffering. I have no hesitation, and my case was of the worst chronic order. HON. JUDGE LEE, Camden, N. J.

Don't Suffer with Rheumatism. Dr. Fitler—My duty to you and the public compels me to state that after giving up all hope of ever being cured of Rheumatism, and pronounced incurable by prominent physicians, I tried with reluctance your medicine. It has positively cured me—a result I hardly expected. To all persons who have been imposed upon and given up all hope, I recommend it. Mrs. J. HOLLIS GROVER, No. 172 N. Twenty-second street.

A Great Neuralgia Cure. Mrs. Keeley, Ridge Road below Poplar street, states that she suffered 20 years with Neuralgia. She began all sufferers to use her medicine. Dr. Fitler's Great Rheumatic Remedy, infallible in all cases of Neuralgia in head or body.
